

The Department of Comparative Human Development at the University of Chicago invites applications for an open rank faculty position to start on or after July 1, 2023. We seek a scholar who conducts research on learning and socialization, and/or development in context, including but not limited to, research on racial, ethnic, gender, and/or ability differences in educational processes and outcomes. Candidates whose research takes a life course perspective to explore intersections between multiple and overlapping categories of marginalization will be of particular interest. In line with the department's focus on international research, we encourage candidates who conduct research outside the United States to apply. The successful candidate will have demonstrated a record of original research, a commitment to rigorous methodology, and the potential to develop collaborative relationships with scholars currently in our department as well as in other divisions and schools within the University.

Founded in 1940, the Department of Comparative Human Development at the University of Chicago (<https://humdev.uchicago.edu>) is an interdisciplinary department whose faculty includes anthropologists, biologists, linguists, psychologists, sociologists, and methodologists whose theories and methods cross individual social sciences. Research in the department explores the social, cultural, psychological, and biological processes of change that vary across time, between individuals, between societies and cultures, and between species.
