

Sociology/SEEK Lecturer Search 2022

Queens College's Department of Sociology and the Percy Ellis Sutton SEEK program are seeking a full-time Lecturer. This position is set to start in Fall 2022. Responsibilities include: the successful development and teaching of courses, administration of our academic programs, student advising, online course development and deployment, student advising, extracurricular programming development, and the creation of research publications and other original scholarly content.

Preferred areas of expertise include race and ethnicity, diversity, gender, sociology of higher education, and research methodology. We value candidates with an experience or skill set that makes them well-suited to scholarly work at a large urban public school that serves a highly diverse community. We seek candidates who have experience teaching and advising first-generation, diverse undergraduate students and who are willing and able to provide leadership within the unique SEEK program at Queens College. We seek candidates with a demonstrable interest and record in teaching, research, advising, and academic program administration and development. Our institution values the ability to teach successfully, demonstrated scholarship or achievement, and the ability to cooperate with others for the good of the institution.

An ideal candidate will have experience teaching undergraduate courses (both online and in-person), academic program direction and administration, undergraduate student advising, nondegree educational programming, student recruitment, internal assessment, extracurricular student activity organization, and a record of workplace leadership. We prefer a candidate with experience in both sociology and applied social science research, as well as someone with a record teaching introductory sociology, research methodology, race and ethnicity, sociology of education, and other classes fielded by our department. Ph.D. degree in area(s) of experience, or equivalent demonstrated experience in teaching, curricular development, research, and advising first generation college students.

The title of Lecturer at the City University of New York is a "tenure-bearing (certificate of continuous employment) title used for full-time members of the faculty who are hired to teach and perform faculty functions, but do not have a research commitment" (PSC CUNY Contract, Article 11, section 11.1: <https://psc-cuny.org/contract/article-11-classification-titles>).
