Description:

The Department of Sociology in the College of Arts and Sciences at The Ohio State University invites applications for a tenure track position in the fields of race and ethnicity, gender, and/or sexualities at the assistant professor level, to commence autumn semester 2020. We seek candidates who will maintain active research programs, including actively seeking external funding; contribute to both graduate and undergraduate teaching; and provide service to the department and the profession. It is expected that this person will also help us build links to programs at the university and to interdisciplinary research centers, such as the Kirwan Institute for the Study of Race and Ethnicity, the Institute for Population Research, or the Criminal Justice Research Center.

This position is part of a Faculty Cluster Hiring Initiative launched by the College of Arts and Sciences at The Ohio State University to achieve greater diversity in our professorial ranks, foster an inclusive university community, and promote research and teaching on topics central to racial, ethnic, gender, and sexual orientation disparities in modern society.
